

Contacting State Legislators: What You Need to Know

Personal Contact

The most effective of all legislative contacts come when you can speak person to person with your own legislators in their home district. Legislators are anxious to meet constituents and discuss needs and concerns. Local events, such as meetings of Chambers of Commerce, Kiwanis, Rotary, country fair, to name a few, give you a chance to introduce yourself and become personally acquainted. If a bill comes up during the legislative session on which you want to have input, it is very helpful if you have established a prior relationship with your senator and representative.

If you are able to make a visit to the Capitol, keep several points in mind:

- Call ahead to your legislators if possible. Make an appointment, or at least let them know you will be visiting and roughly what time. Schedules are hectic, and seemingly without order, so you may have to rely on a chance meeting in the hallway. Legislators do, however, want to meet their constituents and hear their views.
- Understand that your opportunity to discuss a bill or an issue may be very limited and very short. Know the bill number if possible, and be prepared to quickly convey your support, opposition, or other feelings.
- Always be factual, accurate and truthful. Don't guess, and don't embellish the impacts of a bill, one way or the other.

Phone Calls, Letters or Emails

Many times you will be able to contact a legislator concerning a specific bill by letter or telephone. For many legislators, during the session, email is the preferred means of communication, and they do religiously read and respond to emails. Here are some helpful hints:

- Try to put your concerns in your own words. Legislators frequently get form letters or else a number of letters which are apparently rewritten copies of a form letter; which has been sent out by an association or organization. Such letters carry relatively little weight.
- Refer to a specific bill, preferably using the bill number (e.g. SB 08-149) and briefly describe what it does. Tell what it does that you support or oppose and why.
- Be sure you understand the issue. Legislators may try to back you off by challenging your understanding of the impact of the bill. Be up to date on changes if possible. Frequently a constituent will make a plea to a legislator, only to have the legislator tell them that the bill has been amended and no longer does what you thought it did.
- If you telephone, you frequently will get a voice mail or a secretary. Leave a brief, but clear message, referring to the bill, bill number; briefly what it does, and the position you wish them to take. If you simply leave a message to call you back, it will likely be after crucial action on the bill has occurred before the legislator gets back to you, so they won't know your position before they vote. But if you have told them your position, they will probably get it before they vote, and will give it some weight, especially if they know you and recognize your name.
